

Dear [Representative Name],

I am writing to you because I am concerned about the AI industry's unchecked growth, and the potential dangers it poses to the creators of content that I and millions of other Americans value.

Currently, AI companies are taking and misusing copyrighted content from a wide array of publishers, from large media companies to lone content creators, all without compensating them for their valuable work. America's publishers play an important role in our society - they keep communities informed, hold those in power accountable, and support the free flow of information and ideas. But they can't continue to do so if the valuable work they produce is taken and repackaged for consumers by AI companies, without compensation

As your constituent, I'm concerned that by allowing AI companies to undercut the business models of American content creators, they are no longer going to be able to afford to make the content that I and the rest of your constituents value, or deliver critical information that we rely on.

AI is an exciting industry, but it's one that must be developed responsibly. I am asking you to work with your colleagues to develop rules to hold AI companies accountable, and require them to compensate publishers for the content they use to train their models and provide real-time answers.

Warmly,

TKTK